(54) Title: SERETO EXPLORATION BOARD

(57) Abstract 1. WHAT IS IT USED FOR?

To teach children about the different aspects of Setswana culture in a typical Setswana home or community. The children can play some pretend roles on it, such as that of a Motswana woman cooking outdoors, hanging laundry on the washing line, family members going in and out of the hut, interacting with animals and tying shoelaces.

2. COMPARISON TO OTHER GAMES

This product is unique because it depicts a variety of traditional Setswana roles in a community, all on a wooden board. It is both a fun and educational way of teaching children about Setswana roles/activities in a community.

(54) Title: SERETO EXPLORATION BOARD

(57) Abstract 1. WHAT IS IT USED FOR?

To teach children about the different aspects of Setswana culture in a typical Setswana home or community. The children can play some pretend roles on it, such as that of a Motswana woman cooking outdoors, hanging laundry on the washing line, family members going in and out of the hut, interacting with animals and tying shoelaces.

2. COMPARISON TO OTHER GAMES

This product is unique because it depicts a variety of traditional Setswana roles in a community, all on a wooden board. It is both a fun and educational way of teaching children about Setswana roles/activities in a community.

3.HOW DIFFERENT MATERIALS ARE USED FOR DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE BOARD

MATERIAL

Wood

fabric/leather

Grass

[;astoc

Clay

Fittings, gears, hinges, catches

PARTS

Board, huts, block letters, pots, wheels animals, kraal

clothes

tatch

castors

(54) Title: VENTILATOR HOOD

(57) Abstract

In this design. the concepts of ventilator hood have been adopted from open source and adapted to suit our specifications, yet still adhering to the set international standards by governing bodies of the medical field. The hood fulfils the idea on how healthcare frontline workers might be better protected by individually isolating critically ill patients with COVID-19. A locally available material was chosen and sourced to manufacture the product. The transparent, movable personal ventilation hood sucks air that is removed from the patient while creating a good droplet containment barrier. The device is additionally large enough to accommodate other medical equipment that may be attached to the patient. COVID 19 virus is carried via droplets expelled by infected patients. The hood helps to confine bigger droplets to a known area around the patient while smaller droplets are sucked away through an attached ventilating system and filtered out through a high-efficiency particulate air cleaner. The pressure is easily set using the control knobs. A mixture of oxygen and medical air at the correct proportions will be supplied from either the hospital lines or directly from the cylinders and administered to the patient thorough this device. A trained medical staff can adjust these parameters accordingly to suit the patient's needs. The prototype device has been made using readily accessible components at a low cost, making it suitable for low to middle income countries. Our testing (figure 2) has shown that the hood allows healthcare workers to interact with their patients and get a visual sense of their condition through the clear plastic, but with a reduced risk of infection. The device has since been prototyped and tested with a team of experts and researchers from Faculty of Engineering and Technology, and Faculty of Medicine in consultation with medical care specialists, nurses and other communicable disease experts at Sir Ketumile Masire Teaching Hospital (SKMTH) to confirm that its application is practical, hygienic, effective and safe.

(54) Title: Electronic Control Circuit for Mechanical Ventilator

(57) Abstract In this design, an open source ventilator design was adopted and customised to meet the local demands. The advantages of the design is that the ventilator can be manufactured locally at a much lower cost compared to conventional ventilators to meet the affordability of the local hospitals and the nation. The ventilator was designed and fabricated following the UK standards for rapidly manufactured ventilators at the Faculty of Engineering and Technology at the University of Botswana in conjunction and having verified its operation from the Faculty of Health Sciences and the Sir Ketumile Masire Teaching Hospital (SKMTH). The design is a volume controlled ventilator with variable respiration rate, IE ratio and tidal volume. A feedback system provides information to the medics by the use of two displays one of which is optional and provides more extra information. The entire breathing circuit consist of bio-compatible materials that are already used and passed for use in patient ventilation applications. A monitoring and alarm system is incorporated to alert caregivers in the event of abnormal function. The design is versatile offering conventional use in static use, mobile use and/or use in ambulances with minimal adjustment. The device has since been prototyped and tested with a team of experts and researchers from Faculty of Engineering and Faculty of Medicine in consultation with medical care specialists at the Sir Ketumile Masire Teaching Hospital (SKMTH) to confirm that its application is practical.
